

Emerging

Many people have found that religion and traditional ways of thinking about God and the nature of reality no longer work for them. They are hungry for new models of living and thinking that are independent of institutions and tradition. Some have returned to ancient beliefs and practices, feeling the old ways had more connection to the Earth and their souls than our current religions. Still others, rejecting everything, feel there may be something there, but are out of trust with themselves and the world and are unsure about their inner wisdom and a deeper connection to themselves. Most feel very alone as seeking for their true God continues. Valerie Fouquette has written her way through this journey, including her dark night of the soul, turning her experiences, confusion, fears, joy and wisdom into poetry and essays. Readers are likely to find they experience their own deep feelings as they read these words. An intellectual understanding is not the goal. Much of getting in touch with the Soul is about getting the mind out of the way. In an effort to enhance the readers experience, Valerie has added personal comments and suggested activities at the end of the book. They may be done alone or with others.
